

ABSTRACT

Described herein is a system for operating memory at reduced power, based on whether the memory is actually in use. A memory controller receives notifications from an operating system or other computer program regarding which areas of physical memory are actually in use. The memory controller is responsive to the notifications to operate unused portions of memory at reduced In systems having refreshable memory, the memory controller omits refreshing for those memory rows that are not currently in use.